

JustPour

Creative Brief

JustPour stands for two things: convenience and quality.

It allows people to make café-style drinks in under 30 seconds — without machines, without complexity, without waiting. From cappuccinos and iced lattes to orange espresso and experimental recipes, JustPour is built to be extremely versatile while still delivering café-quality taste.

But beyond everything else, the #1 reason people choose JustPour is simple: It makes good coffee unbelievably convenient.

Brand Philosophy

JustPour has never behaved like a traditional coffee brand. The brand has always leaned into the unexpected - creating work that feels unconventional, internet-native, culture-aware, and impossible to ignore.

The ideology is simple:

Think stupid.

Think differently.

Do the thing nobody expects.

One of our biggest viral campaigns came from a completely absurd statement:

“Coffee is Pink.”

And it worked. The campaign generated over 2.5 million organic views across social platforms because it sparked curiosity, conversation, confusion, and attention — while still keeping the product at the center.

That balance matters. We are not trying to be loud for the sake of being loud. We are trying to be creatively disruptive.

There is a very thin line between: cheap virality and intelligent attention.

JustPour should always live on the right side of that line.

The Task

Take JustPour and experiment with it.

Push it into spaces where coffee brands normally do not exist.

Create content that people stop scrolling for.

Make people say:

“Wait... what?”

The goal is top-of-funnel attention — but attention rooted in creativity, culture, and product truth.

The product must remain the hero.

Core Territories to Explore

These are directions — not limitations.

We strongly encourage thinking beyond these examples.

1. Product Usage Experiments

“Recipes that probably shouldn’t exist... but somehow work.”

JustPour is versatile enough to become a playground.

The idea here is to create:

- visually satisfying recipes
- unusual combinations
- internet-native drink formats
- aesthetically shot experiments
- café-style creations made absurdly simple

The important part:

Even when the recipe is experimental, the execution should feel accessible, premium and desirable, not gimmicky.

Think:

- cinematic pours
- texture shots
- ASMR
- clean visual storytelling
- modern internet aesthetics

Not “crazy food content.”

2. Convenience Showcase

“Making café coffee where nobody expects it.”

This is one of the strongest territories for JustPour because convenience is the brand’s biggest advantage. The product removes friction.

So the content should dramatize that.

Examples:

- Making an iced latte in the middle of traffic
- Coffee at a signal stop
- Airport security line coffee
- Hostel room café setup
- Making coffee faster than a café can serve it

The idea is simple: If you can make café-quality coffee anywhere in under 30 seconds, that itself becomes entertainment.

3. Humour & Cultural Behaviour

“Coffee so easy, you accidentally become a café.”

This territory is about relatability, internet humour, and exaggerated behaviour.

Examples:

- Friend group treating you like a barista because you own JustPour

- Parents suddenly asking for café coffee daily
- Turning random places into cafés